December 10, 2014 – In an announcement released this morning, MetaJure's automated document management system was named #2 in the 2014 list of top new products for lawyers by the readers of TechnoLawyer® TL NewsWire™, one of the best-known newsletters covering products and services of interest to legal professionals.

"It's not every year that new software for document management hits the scene," states publisher Neil Squillante in the announcement. "Unlike traditional document management systems, MetaJure eschews manually-created document profiles in favor of automatic indexing and Google-like search technology."

In an October, TechnoLawyer® NewsWire™ featured a full blog post describing MetaJure's capabilities and benefits.

"We couldn't be more excited to receive this recognition," said CEO Rob Arnold. "It is a clear indication of the value that MetaJure is offering lawyers, their firms and departments. MetaJure eliminates the need for lawyers to be administrative clerks. Plus, it reduces the risk of noncompliance with record retention rules, a leading cause of malpractice claims according to the ABA Standing Committee on Professional Liability."

Founded by senior attorneys, MetaJure is a Seattle-based technology company that has developed Smart Document Management System (DMS) software for the legal industry. MetaJure's DMS automatically collects, stores and indexes all of a firm's information and allows lawyers and staff to retrieve it with a simple Google-like search.
